

The National Procurement Development Framework in Scotland (United Kingdom)

Public Procurement Principle: Capacity

Procurement Stage: All stages

Audience: Policy maker, Procuring entity

Description

The National Procurement Development Framework in Scotland is aligned with the Chartered Institute of Procurement and Supply (CIPS) global standards and allows procurement personnel to self-assess their skills, identify relevant training and development needs, and plan their career and personal development. The self-assessment can be carried out in two ways, either simple or tailored. The tailored self-assessment allows the user to create a custom fitted profile to score against which also identifies areas for development. In the simple version the self-assessment uses scoring against a standardised role profile to identify areas for development.
