

Monika Sztajerowska is a trade economist and policy analyst in the Trade and Agriculture Directorate of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in Paris. She specialises in the issues of trade, private sector development, energy and infrastructure. In the past she worked as a consultant for the U.S. State Department and the German Institute for Economic Research. She holds a Master's degree in International Economics and International Relations from Johns Hopkins University and a Bachelor's degree in Economics and European Studies from London School of Economics and King's College London.