

Gita Subrahmanyam is a Research Associate with the Public Policy Group at the London School of Economics and Political Science. She has worked at the LSE since January 2004, as Tutorial Fellow in Public Policy, Development Adviser to PhD Students and Postdoctoral Research Staff, and British Academy Postdoctoral Fellow. Prior to joining the LSE, she spent several years working as an investment portfolio manager on Wall Street. She holds a bachelors degree in Finance and Marketing from the Wharton School of Business, and a Masters and PhD in Government from the LSE. Her academic research focuses on democratisation and development trends in Africa and Asia, and she also has extensive practical experience in public policy analysis and evaluation. The paper on which her ICITE presentation is based, 'Tackling Youth Unemployment in the Maghreb', will be published in the African Development Bank's North Africa Policy Series later this year.
